management methods, and having the chance to adapt to these changes in styles creates a more well-rounded individual. Additionally, we learned how to quickly transition on to and off of projects, which has helped us to make immediate impact when joining new teams. We also learned about APL's professional staff classifications matrix, which characterizes and distinguishes the Lab's five professional staff classifications. The matrix, in conjunction with regular coaching, was a useful grounding tool for assessing our career growth when working under multiple management chains throughout the program. We now recognize that every staff member is an individual and there is no one-size-fits-all management routine.
